"Major and unusual", that is the term the Los Angeles Times used to describe this week's California chemical snow blizzard. Nonstop engineered winter weather warfare is being waged on the Western US. Chemical ice nucleation cloud seeding operations can and are creating snowstorms out of what would otherwise have been a rain event for many regions. The same operations also produce a cold dense layer of air that settles to the surface, this augments the overall impact and effectiveness of engineered winter weather objectives. The engineered cool-down programs are currently scheduled to continue another two weeks, though the weather-makers can always alter the script. In the southeastern US record high temperatures are pushing 90 degrees. How much further can the climate system be pushed until it completely collapses? The latest installment of Global Alert News is below.
