*A riverboat crew member involved in a massive brawl on a popular riverfront dock in Montgomery, Alabama, said he was just doing his job when he found himself involved in the fight that gained national attention last month. “I went to work to work, not to be in a fight or get jumped on,” Dameion Pickett, co-captain of the Harriott II, said Monday on ABC’s “Good Morning America.” “There’s a cause and effect of every situation,” he added. The August 5 fight stemmed from a dispute over a dockside parking spot at Montgomery’s Riverfront Park between the crew of the riverboat and the owners of a small private boat. Clare County District Judge Steven R. Worpell Jr. on Tuesday, Sept. 5, arraigned 63-year-old James F. Chapman on single counts of assault and battery and disturbing the peace. The charges are misdemeanors punishable by up to 93 and 90 days in jail, respectively, and a $500 fine. Worpell set a $3,000 personal recognizance bond for Chapman. Chapman's case is slated for a pre-trial hearing before Judge Joshua M. Farrell on Sept. 26. Chapman's charges stem from an incident that occurred the afternoon of July 8 at the Doherty Hotel, 604 N. McEwan St. At the time, the executive committee of the Michigan GOP was holding a meeting in a conference room, attended by Clare County Republican Party Chair Mark L. DeYoung.

In response to Freedom of Information Act requests, the Clare Police Department previously provided MLive their written reports and about 51 minutes of footage recorded by responding officers' body-worn cameras. Officers interviewed DeYoung, 55, near the hotel's lobby, who complained of pain in his ribs and his lower side. DeYoung said he was in the meeting when a locked door began rattling. He said got up and went to investigate, and "as soon as (I) opened the door, (I) got kicked in the crotch." Fearing he was about to get punched, DeYoung said he took off his eyeglasses, at which point Chapman charged and tackled him. DeYoung struck a chair and landed on his back, he said.

Fightful Select (subscription required but recommended) reported Sunday that backstage at AEW All In, CM Punk and Jack Perry were involved in an altercation shortly before Punk’s match with Samoa Joe. Perry said on camera during his Zero Hour pre-show match Sunday, “It’s real glass, cry me a river,” in reference to his alleged conflict with Punk earlier this summer, and it ignited another incident between the two. Now, it seems both men will pay the consequences. According to Wrestling Observer’s Bryan Alvarez, Punk and Perry are believed to be suspended by AEW pending the results of an investigation, which means neither man will be involved at Sunday's All Out pay-per-view. According to Fightful Select, Perry allegedly "stepped in" Punk's face and "bumped" him, before Punk reportedly "choked" him. There was no word on who broke up the fight. Another side said Punk threw the first punch, while other accounts say that Punk initiated things. After exchanging words, Punk allegedly stepped up to Perry, got in his face and put Perry in a front facelock before the altercation was broken up. PWInsider reported that Perry was asked to leave while Punk stayed for a little while after his match with before departing. Nick Hausman of Haus of Wrestling added that Punk left Wembley Stadium on his own, understanding the situation wasn't good and not wanting to escalate things further.

And that's where this incident appears to be from. Two women got into it and it was more of a mismatch than the game. The one fan didn't even bother getting off her phone to throw the other woman about three rows and it somehow only got worse from there. The woman who appears to be the aggressor gets carried away by a friend who seems to literally laugh in her face.
